DOUGLAS

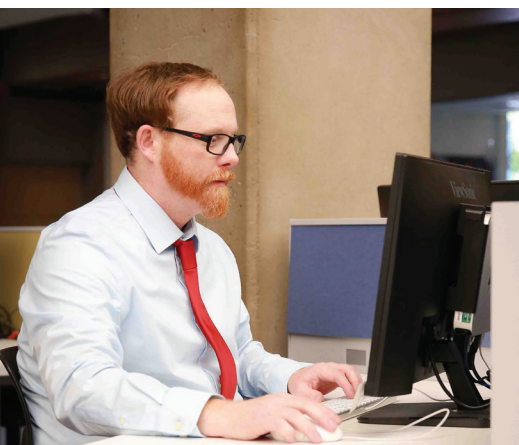

Douglas | Cybersecurity Student

Douglas has long had a goal of achieving a career that would allow him to support his family. Experiencing epilepsy since childhood created hardships for Douglas and made him think that college was not a possibility. However, at LCC, he found the opportunity for a flexible and accessible career through the cybersecurity program.

I once felt isolated and powerless and didn't have many outlets. I found one in poetry, and I got involved with writers from my area. That was a really good stepping stone because I got to go to different colleges and see what kind of opportunities they had.”

– Douglas

When a family member fell for a ransomware scam, Douglas found a new passion for cybersecurity, which helps him thrive in his chosen major.

“I felt like something was drawing me toward wanting to help. I realized that I could combine my desire to help people with my problem-solving skills.”

“

Going back to school is one of the most beneficial things that any person can do — not only for themselves, but for their community, their environment, and everyone else around them.”

– Douglas
